

In Every Contract There Must Be An Offer And Acceptance

A man walks into a pub.

"Good evening Sir" said the landlord, "what would you like to drink?"

"A large whiskey thank you" said the man

"That will be £3.50" said the landlord

"No" said the man. "I distinctly remember you invited me to have a drink. I thought that was very kind of you"

The landlord turned to another customer who was a Solicitor and asked for his support

The Solicitor said he was very sorry, but the landlord had definitely made an offer and the man had accepted it so he did not have to pay

The landlord was furious and turned the man out, telling him never to come back again.

But about 10 minutes later the man reappeared

"I thought I told you never to come back here" said the landlord

"I've never been here before" said the man

"Then you must have a double" said the landlord

"Thank you very much" said the man "I will and I am sure my Solicitor friend would like one too"

This one was "loaned" from Mark Cato's website "Dying to Live". Thank you Sir.